

Sentiment Analysis - A Comparison of Machine Learning Models

Name: Krithika Venkatanath

Student ID: 103539219

Social media is widely used to express one's opinion on a particular topic. The textual data available in tweets on Twitter, Facebook and Instagram posts, comments on YouTube, etc. is present in an unstructured format. Further, people may express their thoughts using different colloquialisms or slangs and emoticons. As a result, understanding or processing this data is a challenge. However, processing this data can yield significant insights into what people think about a company's products and can be leveraged in marketing campaigns.

Sentiment analysis, often known as opinion mining, is a technique used in natural language processing (NLP) to determine the emotional element of a document. This is a common technique used by organisations to analyse product reviews, customer feedback and survey results.

In this project, sentiment analysis is performed on tweets using different supervised machine learning approaches. A performance comparison of each model is provided.

1. Setup

To run this Jupyter notebook, please uncomment and run the following cells. This will setup Twint, a tool to extract tweets from Twitter.

1.1. Twint Installation

```
In [1]: # # Install Twint

!git clone --depth=1 https://github.com/twintproject/twint.git
%cd twint
!git pull origin master
!pip install -r requirements.txt
!python setup.py install
```

```
In [2]: # !pip install --upgrade aiohttp && pip install --force-reinstall aiohttp-socks
```

In [3]: # # Install Nest Asyncio

!pip install nest_asyncio
```

1.2. Import Packages

```
In [4]: #Importing packages and modules import pandas as pd import numpy as np import matplotlib.pyplot as plt import seaborn as sns

import datetime from collections import Counter

#nltk

```

2. Data Acquisition

To acquire the data, two main steps are followed:

- Tweets are scraped from Twitter using Twint
- The CSV generated is loaded onto the Jupyter Notebook

2.1. Data Scrapping

```

In [5]: # Move into the Twint directory

%cd twint

```

/Users/kriithikavenkatanath/Documents/Swinburne/Semester 2 2022/Big Data/Project/twint

```

In [6]: import nest_asyncio nest_asyncio.apply()

import twint

```

Extract data from Twitter using the keyword "Pizza Hut" to find at least 10,000 tweets on Pizza Hut.

```

In [7]: config = twint.Config()
config.Search = "Pizza Hut" config.Lang = "en" config.Limit = 10000 config.Store_csv = True
config.Output = "pizza"

twint.run.Search(config)

1589798639320588289 2022-11-08 12:55:07 +1100 <danijustmight> Pizza. I've easily done it. 6th - 12th grade I ate the school pizza Mon - Fri. In my 20s I lived off of 2 orders of @pizzahut a week. I probably still eat pizza at least 2-3 times a week between all the varieties there are.

1589798635373752320 2022-11-08 12:55:06 +1100 <Mark74607365> @NickAdamsinUSA I find it interesting because an Alpha is usually the strongest, healthiest, and most intelligent member of the pack... However, pizza hut and Hooters are not healthy meal choices at all and would be considered Beta food 1589299843700514816 2022-11-07 03:53:05 +1100 <M_Rivera_82> @coffee_anytime Interesting metaphor. If you remove the roof and replace it with a new façade, then no one will be able to tell. Then it's no longer really a pizza hut. The building doesn't have a chromosome distinction that persists. I think the metaphor is a bit shallow but I see the point.

3. Data Preparation

In data preparation, the following three steps take place:

- Data Labelling
- Data Cleaning
- Data Processing

3.1. Data Labelling

Data labelling was performed using VADER (Valence Aware Dictionary for sEntiment Reasoning) (Hutto, 2022). VADER is a sentiment analysis tool that detects both polarity and intensity of the sentiment (i.e.) it can detect whether a text expresses positive, negative or neutral sentiment and how strong the sentiment is.

The tweets are labelled as -1 if they display a negative sentiment, 0 if they display a neutral sentiment and 1 if they display a positive sentiment. These labels are given in the 'label' column. Numerical labelling is done to make the training process easier since a supervised learning approach is adopted. However, corresponding 'negative', 'neutral' and 'positive' values are given in the 'sentiment' column.

VADER - Sentiment Intensity Analyser

def label_tweets(sentence):
    """
    The function labels each tweet as negative, neutral or positive based on the following values

    Negative -> -1
    Neutral -> 0
    Positive -> 1
    """

    result = sia.polarity_scores(sentence)

    if result['compound'] >= 0.05:
        return 1
    elif result['compound'] <= -0.05:
        return -1
    else:
```

```

3.3. Data Processing

Natural Language Processing (NLP) processes are applied in this section. It consists of the following steps:

- Filter data set for English tweets
- Cleaning of Tweets
- Tokenisation
- Removal of Stop Words
- Lemmatisation
- Generation of Ngrams (Bigrams)
- Creation of Word Embeddings

4. Data Exploration

4.1. Univariate Analysis

Visualising the most common words used in tweets overall as well as based on sentiment.

It can be seen that words such as like, good, thank, please, etc. are classified as containing positive sentiments. Similarly, offensive words are classified as containing negative sentiments. Neutral sentiments mostly contain verbs such as try, make, eat, need, know, etc.

Percentage of Tweets based on Sentiment

4.2. Bivariate Analysis

4.2.1. Distribution of Tweets based on Date and Sentiment

It can be seen that 4th, 5th and 6th November 2022 recorded the top three highest number of tweets regarding Pizza Hut. This is possibly due to a greater number of people ordering pizza on weekends. This hypothesis is proven by Figure 9 since 4th, 5th and 6th November 2022 are Friday, Saturday and Sunday, respectively. Hence, there are more number of tweets on days with more orders.

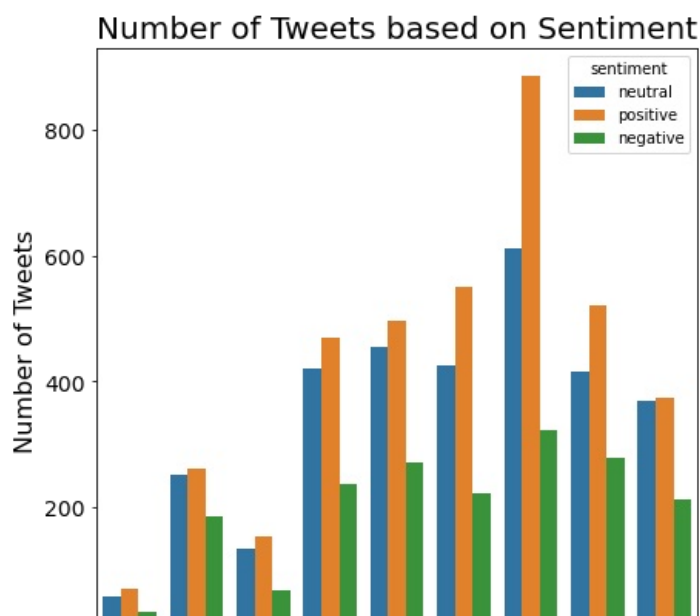

In [60]:

plt.figure(figsize=(7,7))

temp = pd.DataFrame()
temp['date'] = df['date'].dt.date temp['sentiment'] = df['sentiment'] temp = temp.sort_values(by='date')

plt.yticks(fontsize=14); #' is used to suppress text output describing yticks
```

4.2.2. Distribution of Tweets based on Token Count

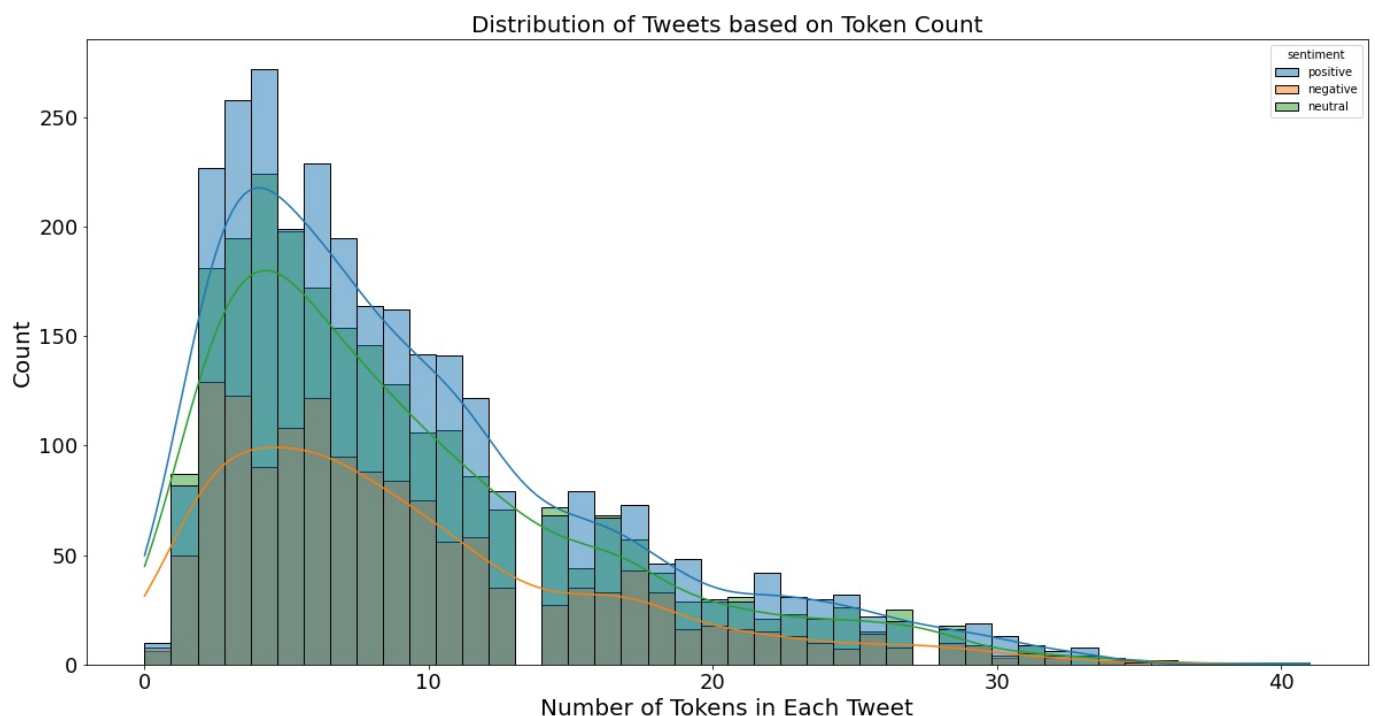

From the graph, it can be seen that on an average, all sentiments usually have approximately five tokens in their tweets.

5. Data Modelling

The feature was set to the cleaned tweets generated and the target variable was set to the label column. The data set was then split into training and testing sets with 80% as training data and 20% as testing data. Feature engineering was performed to convert the tokens and bigrams into a Term Frequency – Inverse Document Frequency (TF-IDF) matrix to facilitate in the training process.

Once the data was ready for modelling, stratified K-fold cross-validation was performed with five folds. Stratified K-fold cross-validation was chosen as it is better for imbalanced data sets since it ensures equal representation of all classes across each fold. Further, hyperparameter tuning was performed for the random forest classifier and the linear SVC. The random forest classifier's number of trees were set to the values 100, 150, 200, 250 and 300. Similarly, the linear SVC's hyperparameter C was set to values 0.01, 0.1, 1, 10 and 100.

It is observed from the above graph that Linear SVC with hyperparameter C set to the value 1 and Logistic Regression models have the highest mean accuracy, mean precision and mean recall. Hence, the Linear SVC (C=1) and Logistic Regression models will be selected for training and testing using the training and testing sets created earlier. Their performances will be compared using the confusion matrix and classification reports.

By measuring the accuracies of the two models, it can be seen that although their performances are comparable, the Linear SVC (C=1) model is more accurate than the Logistic Regression model.

5.4. Verification

To further verify sentiment analysis performed by the Linear SVC (C=1) and Logistic Regression models, two random tweets are selected with their labels. The label predicted by the Linear SVC (C=1) and Logistic Regression models is given.

5.4.1. Neutral Sentiment Tweet

In [83]: tweet = df.iloc[100]['tweet']
         tweet
```

Out[83]: 'I wanna go on a movie date ☺ the ones that have flowers in the front seat when I'm picked up , snacks from the dollar store, a blanket , & a little personal pan pizza meal from Pizza Hut \U0001f979\U0001f979'

In [84]: df.iloc[100]['label']
```

Out[84]: 0
```

```
In [85]: vector = vectorizer.transform([tweet])

Linear SVC prediction
result = svc.predict(vector)
result[0]
```

```
Out[85]: 0
```

```
In [86]: # Logistic Regression prediction result = logreg.predict(vector)
```

```
Out[86]: 0
```

5.4.2. Positive Sentiment Tweet

In [87]: tweet = df.iloc[101]['tweet']
         tweet
```

Out[87]: '@I_am_lynnnsane nope, totally new and even better'

```
In [88]: df.iloc[101]['label']
```

```
Out[88]: 1
```

```
In [89]: vector = vectorizer.transform([tweet])

Linear SVC prediction
result = svc.predict(vector)
result[0]
```

Out[89]: 1

```
In [90]: # Logistic Regression prediction result = logreg.predict(vector)
result[0]
```

Out[90]: 1

Storing the Model

The Linear SVC (C=1) model is stored as a pickle file for future use.

```
In [91]: # Importing Pickle package import pickle
```

```
In [92]: # Saving the model

modelFile = open('model.pickle', 'wb') pickle.dump(svc, modelFile) modelFile.close()

Conclusion

Twint was used to collect tweets from Twitter containing the keyword 'Pizza Hut', which were labelled using VADER. For the data set acquired, different supervised machine learning models were applied on to find out the best performing model.

The Linear SVC (C=1) model has optimum performance while implementing sentiment analysis on the tweets to categorise them as having positive, neutral or negative sentiment. It has an accuracy of 80%.
